

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL COMMENT	The US rediscovers multilateralism	1
NEWS	The US: US deal over Basel II • SEC plans anti-fraud rule for hedge funds... • ... but eases up over accounting • Financial oversight review begins • SEC in the spotlight... • ... as its political tilt shifts • Fury over watchdog’s “terrorism blacklist” • Activists “too powerful” under post-Enron reforms • The cost of SOX • Troubles grow in the subprime market. The UK: New head for the FSA... • ... as Tiner bows out • Private equity rethink • Give back that unclaimed money, banks told • Watchdog’s under-spends its budget • New anti-money laundering rules. Europe: The battle for ABN Amro • Cash limits for travellers in EU • McCreevy’s share plan falters • Germany rescues subprime victim • Solvency directive adopted • Turkish regulatory agency blocks sale. Rest of the World: Qatar unifies regulatory system • New regulations in Dubai • India moves to converge with IFRS • China joins the FATF • FSF recommendations on hedge fund risks • Japanese activist investor jailed... • ... and Japan prepares to crack down on hedge funds • N. Korean depositor’s cash released.	3
EXTRA-TERRITORIALITY	Patriot games The case of Banco Delta Asia and its North Korean dollar funds shows that applications of the Patriot Act to foreign bank accounts will only succeed if the US works with other regulators, writes Kern Alexander. SOX: A case study in extra-territoriality With New York losing financial business to London, many have pointed to the Sarbanes-Oxley Act as a leading culprit of over-regulation. But as Dana (Tod) Ackerly II writes, its consequences may be even further reaching.	15 21
ITALY	Italian regulation: glass half-full? After a series of high-profile financial scandals, the authorities have made progress in reforming the once-chaotic regulatory environment, but much remains to be done, writes Marco Onado.	29
GERMANY	Bafin under fire Plans to dismantle Bafin’s leadership structure and undermine integrated supervision have come at the worst possible time, writes Klaus Engelen.	37

THE Financial Regulator

Volume 12 Number 2 – September 2007

CHINA	Broken China: fixing a fragile regulatory framework 43 Regulation has come a long way in China where for decades financial institutions were governed by rigid plans. But as exponential growth continues – GDP grew 11.9% in Q2 2007 – and Chinese finance becomes increasingly sophisticated, fragmented regulation looks inappropriate, writes Hui Feng.
SOLVENCY II	Europe leads the way in insurance regulation 49 With insurance regulation in global flux, Roger Ferguson looks at how the EU's Solvency II could become the benchmark for insurance regulators elsewhere.
MONEY LAUNDERING/ TERRORIST FINANCING	Tackling the crooks: regulatory priorities 54 Richard Pratt looks at how regulators are tackling the fast-growing – and apparently unstoppable – problem of money laundering and terrorist financing.
ISLAMIC FINANCE	A cross-sectoral approach to Islamic financial supervision 59 At a time financial institutions are devising increasingly complex financial products, regulators are struggling to find common ground, say Dirk Witteveen and Bastiaan Verhoef.
STRESS TESTING	Stress testing: the new supervisory vogue 65 As the Bank of England announces plans to use stress testing to measure possible impacts on the UK financial system, Mohamed Lechkar and Iman van Lelyveld take a close look at an increasingly used mechanism to make regulators aware of the vulnerabilities of financial institutions.
BOOKNOTES	When insurers go bust: an economic analysis of the role and design of prudential regulation , Plantin, G. and Rochet, J.C., Princeton University Press 2007. Reviewed by Isaac Alfon. 71 Financial Services – Authorisation, Supervision, and Enforcement: A Litigator's Guide by Jonathan Russen, OUP. Reviewed by Jenifer Daley.